Dear friends, here are Professor Emory Callahan's latest insights.

Please read carefully:

As the current market environment shows, the initiation of interest rate cuts by the Federal Reserve has undoubtedly driven the Dow Jones Industrial Average (Dow) to new highs. However, we must remain vigilant as a market correction is imminent.

This is precisely the moment to which savvy investors should pay attention. While new buying opportunities will arise after the adjustment, it's important to remember that the overall gains for 2024 have already been quite remarkable, indicating that the positive expectations from interest rate cuts have largely been priced in by the market.

The fourth quarter is expected to be characterized by volatility, so we need to selectively look for opportunities in specific stocks. The substantial upward momentum seen in the first half of the year may be difficult to replicate, but there are still untapped quality stocks that hold potential buying opportunities.

Regarding the current trading strategy in the U.S. stock market, I lean towards seizing opportunities for a rebound in oversold stocks. For stocks that have surged significantly recently, I recommend that you appropriately reduce your positions at high levels to lock in some profits.

Following the overall rhythm of the indices and engaging in flexible swing trading will be key to capturing profits in the future. After the three major indices fluctuate to new highs, they often experience periodic corrections, which is the opportunity we must seize!

Once the adjustments stabilize, high-quality stocks will present attractive buying opportunities once again.

What I want to emphasize is this: don't just hold onto stocks without making any moves! Swing trading is currently the best way to realize profits in this market.

Everything has its timing; everything in the world happens at its own pace. The market also follows this principle, with moments of upward movement as well as periods of adjustment.

What we need to do is seize these moments and make smart moves in and out. Friends, now is the time to take action! Don't hesitate—actively adjust your strategy and seize every swing opportunity to lay a solid foundation for future success.

By following the market's rhythm and trading wisely, you can ensure that your investment portfolio remains strong even in turbulent times.

In contrast to the U.S. stock market, Asian markets are showing strong performance, especially China's market which has attracted a lot of attention.

After the Chinese central bank launched a series of economic stimulus measures, the Shanghai Composite Index surged from 2,748 points to nearly 3,400 points in just five trading days, a remarkable increase of 23.72%.

This is the biggest weekly gain since December 2008! The CSI 300 Index also performed exceptionally well, rising about 28%, marking its best weekly performance in nearly 16 years.

Not only that, but the Hong Kong market has also seen a surge. The Hang Seng Index climbed significantly for four straight days with trading volume hitting record highs.

It has reclaimed the 20,000-point level and restored over $440 billion in market value rising 13% last week for its best weekly performance since February 1998!

At the same time, the index for mainland Chinese real estate stocks also made an impressive jump of 16%.

CHINA'S STIMULUS MEASURES ARE CONVINCING INVESTORS THAT THIS TIME IS DIFFERENT

This week's market charts provide a clear answer: Yes, a shift is underway.

The stimulus plan introduced by China has led to a rare market reaction, with a “vertical line” appearing on stock charts for the first time in years, grabbing attention.

This change signals the start of a V-shaped reversal, as investors recognize they are witnessing a fundamental shift in the narrative surrounding the Chinese economy.

Despite being the world's second-largest economy with immense potential, global investors have long viewed its stock market as "virtually uninvestable."

However, this perception was entirely upended this week. The Chinese government unexpectedly announced positive fiscal and monetary policies, prompting global investors to reassess their positions.

Just last Tuesday, China announced a series of robust stimulus measures aimed at boosting its sluggish economy, stabilizing the real estate market and rebuilding market confidence.

Following the announcement, the market responded positively, with stock and bond prices soaring across the board—truly a sight of “everything turning red.” Such comprehensive economic stimulus quickly attracted the attention of international investment banks.

We also promptly headed to the Asian markets for on-the-ground research to stay abreast of the latest market developments.

If all goes well as planned, I will return to the United States next Monday, when I will provide you with firsthand research reports and market insights.

I believe that with the recent sustained rise of Chinese concept stocks in the U.S. market, many of you have already seen the opportunities.

Particularly for those who invest in Chinese concept stocks, now is a great time to take action—this is an opportunity you don't want to miss!

The latest inflation data released last Friday has clarified that the Federal Reserve may continue to cut interest rates this fall, potentially by 25 basis points.

The core Personal Consumption Expenditures (PCE) price index, which excludes volatile food and energy prices, rose by 2.7% year-over-year in August.

This figure meets market expectations, slightly above July's 2.6%, but still exceeds the Fed's target of 2%. This suggests that at the next meeting in November, the Federal Reserve may struggle to justify a one-time cut of 50 basis points.

In fact, the core inflation rate has remained relatively steady over the past two months, with no significant decline, further supporting the case for a modest interest rate cut.

The Federal Reserve does not want to risk a significant weakening of the labor market ahead of November. Regarding whether the interest rate cut at the November meeting will be 25 or 50 basis points, market opinions remain divided.

However, according to the PCE data, the probability of a 50 basis point cut has risen to 54%.

From the recent performance of the U.S. stock market, it seems that bullish momentum is gradually waning. After a strong rally this year, which has occurred, the market is bracing for an upcoming adjustment.

Expectations of interest rate cuts are being gradually priced in, and market movements are becoming better suited to the current environment.

In this uncertain environment, we observe that technical corrections are quietly unfolding, providing excellent buying opportunities for the bulls to reposition.

Some friends may ask, “Since the market is exhibiting a fluctuating trend overall, are there still opportunities?” My answer is: Absolutely! In a market characterized by a mix of bullish and bearish sentiments, opportunities are everywhere.

It is precisely because of market volatility that we can discover and capitalize on these opportunities.

In terms of current trading strategies, we recommend that everyone temporarily avoid stocks that have not stabilized yet after a high adjustment. Instead, for stocks that have stabilized at the bottom and are starting to rise, it could be a good time to enter.

In particular, for professional investors, options trading provides an excellent hedging strategy that allows for flexible risk adjustment amid market fluctuations.

Meanwhile, friends involved in cryptocurrency trading are enjoying a fantastic uptrend for profit. However, it is important to note that after a significant rise in Bitcoin (BTC), we may see a correction today.

Dear friends, what you just read is Professor Emory Callahan's investment interpretation of the major global markets today. As Professor Emory Callahan mentioned, opportunities arise constantly from market fluctuations.

If you want to grasp the latest trading strategies and market trends, please keep an eye on our group messages or directly contact our team for firsthand information.

Many of you might wonder: Why do the stocks I buy never seem to go up, while others keep declining? The famous investment master Jesse Livermore once said, "Stock prices always move in the direction of least resistance." This statement still holds true today. The key issue is whether you truly understand where the market's "line of least resistance" lies.

Sometimes, the apparent fluctuations in stock prices can confuse us, but the underlying driving forces stem from a combination of market sentiment, capital flows, and technical signals. When you find that the stocks you hold are not rising, or even declining, the most important thing is to return to a calm analysis rather than let emotions sway you.

The market won't always go up, true experts know how to find the rhythm in the fluctuations and adjust their strategies.

Successful investors don't let a single pullback or decline defeat them. Instead, they know how to adjust quickly and seize the next opportunity.

Friends, don't let short-term fluctuations trap you. We're here to find the market's rhythm, seize that "line of least resistance," and act decisively at the right moment to win.

Now is the time for you to adjust your strategy and set sail again! Take action, seize every opportunity in each wave, and the future is in your hands!
